My brother, Ryan Jones, and I attended the Building Design Institute by the White Hutchison group last fall. He is an architect and I am a future childcare owner. We both were amazed at the information the group provided us. They were filled with such important details from the layout of a childcare center to the playground essentials. I could tell they all truly cared about children and have the very best in mind when developing a center for them.

Before attending the Institute, I had no idea how much went into designing a childcare center. The group informed us of the pros and cons of different materials that can be used in the building of the center. No detail was left behind and I walked away thinking they are the group I want working with me! As a result, my husband, Bryan, and I have asked White Hutchison to work with us as we begin the developing stages of our center. So far, we have met with Vicki once and during our first meeting we were given tons of resources and other valuable information that has given us the confidence to continue on with our new venture.
